We have been informed by UniCredit Bank that all statements regarding the company's tax liability in Germany must be true and accurate. Where the declaration turns out to be incomplete or not accurate, the client may receive tax privileges in an unlawful and unjustified manner (e.g. exemptions from the withholding tax liabilities). This may lead to tax law or legal consequences including but not limited to financial penalties and/or tax law or criminal procedures as well as to the repayment of taxes to either German tax office(s) or UniCredit Bank as the withholding agent. We also understand that we are obliged by German tax law to immediately notify UniCredit Bank in case of any change in circumstances.

UniCredit Bank will consider the client as being tax domiciled in Germany as long as the required documentation (see above under 2.) will not be presented to UniCredit Bank demonstrating the client's foreign registered office or foreign place of management.

Otherwise, UniCredit Bank will reserve the unilateral right to apply the withholding tax law consequences applicable to German tax domiciled clients where it may have any indication that a client will or is actually being tax domiciled in Germany.
